Griffith Review 59: Commonwealth Now

It is clear that the old empires are long gone, but in the wake of Brexit and the rise of China and India, the shape of a new world order remains unclear. At a time of geopolitical uncertainty, the Commonwealth is poised to play a major role as a values-based network that represents a third of the world’s population. Whether this group can exercise real power and influence is yet to be determined. Commonwealth Now features writers from around the world who explore the contemporary experience of Commonwealth citizens—confronting new challenges and reconciling the past.

Griffith Review 60: Renewed Promise
Edited by Julianne Schultz and Sandra Phillips

Australia has never reached settlement with its First Peoples. Last year, the Uluru Statement From the Heart was developed after months of dialogues with communities, and intended to provide a path to meaningful recognition. Inspired by this movement, Renewed Promise is an urgent, nuanced and robust call to listen, hear and respond. Featuring outstanding Indigenous writers, Renewed Promise explores ways of addressing the ravages of unresolved disputes with courage and respect. Griffin Review excavates history and re-imagines the future, while not forgetting the urgencies of the present.

The burden: African Americans and the enduring impact of slavery
Edited by Rochelle Riley

As award-winning Detroit newspaper columnist Rochelle Riley writes in her opening essay, “slavery is not a relic to be buried, but a wound that has not been allowed to heal. You cannot heal what you do not treat. You cannot treat what you do not see as a problem. And America continues to look the other way, to ask African Americans to turn the other cheek, to suppress our joy, to accept that we are supposed to go only as far as we are allowed.” The burden aims to address this problem. It is a must-read for every American.
